

Doppler

Chapter 19

Doppler

- A moving train with a trumpet player holding the same tone for a very long time travels from your left to your right.
- The tone changes relative the motion of you (receiver) and the player (sound source)
- The f appears to increase as it approaches you from the left and decreases as it moves away from you on your right.
- This change in frequency is a Doppler shift and is called Doppler Frequency

Doppler Frequency

- The frequency only changes when there is a change in the source and receiver position.
- There is no change when the source and receiver remain constant.
- This is the primary physical principle which is used to measure the velocity of blood in a vessel!

Doppler shift

- Defined as The f shift created between the transmitted and received f by an interface moving with velocity at an angle to the sound source.
- It is a low f that rides or uses as a carrier the higher transmitted f
- Separating the two frequencies is done in the system an is call?

Doppler shift

- Doppler shift (Hz) = reflected f - transmitted f
- A transmitted f has a of 5 MHz
- When its reflected off moving blood cells the measures 5.003 MHz
- What is the Doppler shift?
- Is reflects a positive shift because the frequency is higher than the carrier f

Doppler shift

- We already know this shift is created when the transmitted sound strikes moving vessels.
- Positive shifts are created when the change is higher than the original f
- Negative shifts are created when the change is lower than the original f

can be explained as follows When the source of the waves is moving toward the observer each successive wave crest is emitted from a position closer to the observer than the previous wave Therefore each wave takes slightly less time to reach the observer than the previous wave Therefore the time between the arrival of successive wave crests at the observer is reduced causing an increase in the frequency While they are travelling the distance between successive wave fronts is reduced so the waves bunch together Conversely if the source of waves is moving away from the observer each wave is emitted from a position farther from the observer than the previous wave so the arrival time between successive waves is increased reducing the frequency The distance between successive wave fronts is increased so the waves spread out For waves that propagate in a medium such as sound waves the velocity of the observer and of the source is relative to the medium in which the waves are transmitted The total Doppler Effect may therefore result from motion of the source motion of the observer or motion of the medium Each of these effects is analyzed separately For waves which do not require a medium such as light or gravity in general relativity only the relative difference in velocity between the observer and the source needs to be considered
