

MATHS Revision Strategy Plan

Use the guide below to structure your revision. It will show you what to do and in what order, so you can make the most out of your time and achieve your full potential in exam situations.

1

START

Stage 1: Start the revision!

Starting to revise as soon as possible is one of the many keys to success when talking about revising for your exams. The key is to timetable a set amount of revision for the upcoming week and to commit yourself to it.

Seneca, note recap, Quizlet, online textbook, revision guides, etc.

2

RECAP

Stage 2: Recap all of the content!

It is essential that you cover all of the content that may appear in your exam at least once, spending extra time to recap the content you aren't as confident on. This stage will make the next stages of revision much more useful and easier!

Seneca, note recap, Quizlet, online textbook, revision guides, Cornell, etc.

3

CONSOLIDATE

Stage 3: Consolidate all of the content!

After having recapped all of the content, consolidate it using online quizzes and tests, or using the Cornell Method and then blurting! Find what is best for you – it's important not to make your revision too tedious or time-consuming!

Seneca, Cornell method, blurting, Quizlet, online textbook questions, etc.

4

APPLYING

Stage 4: Apply your knowledge to exam questions!

Exam questions are a great way of testing your knowledge of the content and giving you an accurate representation of how good your understanding is. If you are unhappy with your marks, it's time to do some more revision!

PMT, Seneca, past papers, A Hammond Biology, social media, etc.

5

SPACED

Stage 5: Spaced revision

Spaced revision is the final step before an exam – complete small bits of revision every so often (including quizzes and exam questions) and build your long-term memory so you have to do less cramming the night before!

All of the above – just make sure it works for well for you!
