Andrea

LaRoche,2016-01-08 I m done I quit I can t do this anymore I give up It s exhausting trying to raise children with someone who hates you so you re done Done fighting Done placating Done brainstorming ways to make it better Done taking the high road Divorce is hard at the best of times but when you divorce someone who may have a high conflict personality it s a whole new ball game of hell Daily emails that read like novels about how you are the world s worst parent how you are destroying your children with your horrific controlling behaviors sentence after sentence about how your children would be better off without you these are indications that your divorce is high conflict You need to be strong disengage from the mud slinging and secure boundaries and a clear and concise method for communication that keeps you safe and drama free I m Done Take Control of Your High Conflict Divorce will give you everything you need to understand who you are co parenting with how to co parent with them and a little bit of your sanity back during this insane time Mending Fences: A Collaborative,

Cognitive-Behavioral Reunification Protocol Serving the Best Interests of the Post-Divorce, Polarized Benjamin

Garber,2021-04-06 High conflict divorce can leave children polarized within the transitioning family system aligned with one parent and resisting or refusing contact with the other parent Rather than becoming mired in the bottomless pit of back and forth blame more and more courts are seeking remedies in the form of reunification therapy Charged with helping the polarized child to enjoy a healthy relationship with both parents we know what doesn t work individual child therapy cannot remedy a family systems problem Dyadic interventions with the child and either parent are seldom sufficient Even family therapies fall short when they are not grounded in well established reliable and valid science Mending Fences introduces a child centered systemically informed empirically validated and experientially proven collaborative reunification protocol Focusing on the anxiety inhibiting the system s healthy functioning well respected and long validated cognitive behavioral exposure methods are fused with structural family therapy to reduce the child s anxieties about separating from one parent and approaching the other the aligned parent s fears of separation and loss and the rejected parent s fears of rejection A common vocabulary across coordinated interventions allows children across the spectrum of ages and abilities to identify and overcome an individually tailored succession of anxiety inducing events so as to gradually re establish healthy and safe relationships with both parents The Mending Fences protocol is practical proven and effective Case illustrations sample court orders and service agreements are included The user friendly discussion is peppered with up to date references to the scientific literature and international case law Application via video conferencing platforms is discussed Therapy of the Difficult Divorce Marla B. Isaacs,Braulio Montalvo,David Abelson,2000 By integrating family therapy principles and individual dynamics the authors have devised a unique method of face to face problem solving sometimes with the entire family often in sessions with individual members to help restore parental responsibility and to realign relationships with the divorcing family
